Hates Writing -- Social Media -- As a teen, I enjoyed sending handmade cards to faraway friends. I spent hours meticulously cutting and glueing together pieces of card stock, usually without the faintest idea of what to make or write, until I produced something to my liking. I let my hands do the thinking. When I graduated from high school and went off to college, so did I from cardmaking. -- A recent lengthy e-mail correspondence reminded me of how it was once not uncommon for me to write such letters, and the delight of doing so. It also made me question the way I currently interact with people in the digital world, something that's already been on my mind as I recalibrate my priorities in life. -- Over the past few months, I've removed most "unnecessary" apps from my devices. I stopped idling on Google Chat, AIM, and IRC—the latter two being services I'd used almost daily for 15 years—and have been refreshing my inbox less often. A handful of objectively unnecessary apps survived the purge though, including Facebook and Twitter. -- In my effort to decrease time spent on social media, I've found that I use it more selfishly. These days I only open social apps when I have something to share, which feels uncomfortably narcissistic. The immediate praise that comes in the form of likes and faves can

care for it. -- My ability to live in the moment and enjoy everyday life is also diminished, since I tend to snap photos and fumble with my phone instead of enjoying what's at hand. [Link] Nick Bilton's 2012 New Year's Resolution [Link] comes to mind, and resonates with me now more than ever. I do love taking photos though—I've just come to appreciate that an unshared photo is a more meaningful one. -- Don't get me wrong—I prefer to stay in touch with friends and keep apprised of their lives. But I miss the richness that our interactions once had, and would much rather catch up with someone face-to-face or at least through a true correspondence, rather than peek at their life through the distorted lens of social media posts. -- The time and energy I spend streaming disjointed snippets of consciousness to social media would undoubtedly be better spent writing and sharing more cohesive written works. And there are better, private platforms for journaling, which is primarily what I use social media for. -- So today my Facebook and Twitter apps join the purge, replaced by trusty pencil and notebook paper.

If you notice me less on social media (as I hope you will), know that I'm still around, and eagerly await and welcome your letters.

this story -- \(Newser\) - An elderly Utah man described as "too nice of a guy" answered a knock at his door last night and was shot four times by an unknown assailant, KSL.com reports. His wife apparently saw the dark-clothed gunman running away when she hurried to her 72-year-old husband lying in the doorway. He took four shots to the chest, neck, and head, a neighbor says, and is still hospitalized in critical condition. "I just don't understand," says the neighbor, Erin wytenbach. "He was too nice of a guy." wytenbach adds that he had rental properties, "taking care of people and all of that kind of stuff," and she had "never seen him with any enemies." -- "On the surface, it's pretty frightening," says a police lieutenant in west valley city. "We really don't have a motive. We're not sure if it was mistaken identity." The couple had just returned from a symphony concert at 10:40pm when the knock came, leading wyttenbach to believe that "either they were waiting for him or they followed him home or something, I have no idea." Investigators tell the Salt Lake Tribune that no one has come forth with another description of the assailant or a possible motive. "It's really baffling," says the possibilities for new feminist futures? How do our everyday engagements with power complicate how we understand feminist struggle? Tina Campt uses black-feminist concepts to challenge the notion that resistance is the only way to understand the interplay between marginalized subjects and power.

Focusing on archival photographs of black communities in diaspora, she explores the daily practices of black subjects whose struggles are often overlooked in an emphasis on collective and individual acts of resistance. The concept of “fugitivity” or “taking flight” emerges as a signature idiom of black diasporic culture. This can be a meaningful pathway for realizing the futures articulated by black feminist theory. Tina Campt is Ann Whitney Olin professor of Africana and Women’s Gender and Sexuality Studies, and newly appointed co-director of the Barnard Center for Research on Women. She is
